3 Chileans Ask Return, Not Asylum

By PRANAY GUPTE
Special to The New York Times

UNITED NATIONS, N.Y., Nov. 25—"We want to go back, Chile is our home—that's where we were born, that's where we want to live, and that's where we will die," Anna González said this afternoon. Her eyes were bloodshot, her voice quivered and she frequently stumbled over her words.

She is one of three Chilean women who recently came to the United Nations to publicize the arrests and alleged torture of their relatives by Chile's military government, and who were refused re-entry when they tried to go home earlier this week. The women have been offered political asylum by the United States.

Mrs. González, whose husband, two sons and pregnant daughter-in-law have been arrested by the Government of President Augusto Pinochet, had met earlier today with Andrew Young, the United States chief delegate to the United Nations. She was accompanied by Gabriela Bravo and Ulda Ortiz, who had been with Mrs. González last Wednesday when they landed at Santiago, Chile, and were not allowed past the immigration desk.

Concern Over Disappearances

Although Mrs. González, Mrs. Bravo and Mrs. Ortiz spoke to Mr. Young mostly about themselves and the alleged atrocities against their relatives, in interviews later they emphasized their concern over the scores of other people who have reportedly disappeared or have been placed in custody by the military regime in Chile.

The Pinochet regime has come under increasing criticism in recent months for alleged human-rights violations, although a United Nations panel noted last month that the harassment, arrests and torture had been reduced.

Chilean authorities have long denied the charges against the Government, and have even proclaimed their heightened concern for human-rights issues.

But the refusal of Chile to admit the three women was criticized today by several diplomats here and at organizations such as the Council on Hemispheric Affairs.

"Any illusion that the Pinochet Government has turned over a new leaf when it came to human rights is rudely destroyed by this cruel action," said Laurence R. Birns, the council's director.

Mrs. Bravo, whose husband was arrested two years ago, and Mrs. Ortiz, whose husband disappeared three years ago, emotionally described their arrival Wednesday in Santiago.

They said that Chilean secret police had told them that an order had been issued by the Government barring their readmission to the country. The police officials, the women said, had refused to allow them to exchange greetings with friends outside the immigration

Surfers Seeking a New Image—and Money, Too

By ROBERT LINDSEY
Special to The New York Times

SUNSET BEACH, Hawaii—The big waves are rising again on the north shore of Oahu. And so are the hopes of an itinerant fraternity of young men who are trying to polish the image of surfing and make a living by riding the waves.

The Talk of Sunset Beach

Driven by winter storms in the northern Pacific, mountainous waves pound this part of Oahu each year from mid-November until late January, luring surfers from around the world. In a turbulent offshore cauldron, they stand up on their surfboards and, arms outstretched, try to race violent avalanches of water that rise up to 30 feet high and either fling them toward shore with the energy of a rocket or bury them beneath tons of churning white water.

Some of the surfers who flock here at this time of year with aging automobiles and bikini-clad camp followers are like Daniel Geiger, footloose dropouts in search of the ultimate challenge of surfing.

"Everybody says that you haven't really surfed until you've surfed the north shore. That's why I'm here," said Mr. Geiger, a bearded, 19-year-old southern Californian who said that he dropped out of his junior college classes this semester merely to surf here.

His beard, untrimmed hair, suntan and blond girlfriend gave Mr. Geiger the look of the archetypical surfer—a rootless, sun-bronzed vagabond, and like cowboys and mountain men, part of American folklore.

There are a handful of surfers here, however, who are trimming their hair, renting tuxedos for some of their awards banquets and trying to change the old stereotypes while attempting to realize a dream—getting paid for surfing. So far for most, it is still a dream.

About 60 men and perhaps a dozen women call themselves "professional surfers," although they admit that only eight or 10, at most, manage to support themselves by surfing. And none seem to be getting rich.

What income they do derive from surfing comes from the recent emergence of a modest international circuit of surfing contests in Hawaii, Australia, South Africa, Florida and Brazil, plus the endorsements a few receive from makers of surfboards and beach clothing.

Four of the events are held here. The Smirnoff Pro-Am, sponsored by the beverage company, ended last weekend. It is being followed by the Pipeline Masters, named for the so-called Banzi Pipeline, a stretch of beach near here noted for its tubular waves that often enclose surfers as if they were in a pipe: the Duke Kahanamoku Classic, which is the traditional Hawaii surfing championship, and in January, by the so-called Surfing World Cup.

Fred Hemmings Jr., a former amateur surfing champion who now promotes surfing competition here, said that in the last two years, yearly prize money awarded at various surfing contests around the world had probably tripled to about $100,000. But he and others acknowledged that surfing was still a poor man's sport, one striving for respectability.

"We need to get rid of the image that surfing got in America during the 1960's," said Reno Abellira, 27, who won the $5,000 top prize in this year's Smirnoff contest.

"It has a good image in places like Australia and Japan, but not here," he said. "People think of surfing [in America] either like those old movies like 'Gidget Goes to Hawaii' or in connection with rebellious psychedelic flower children of the 60's."

Peter Townend, a wiry, blond Australian noted for a graceful arched-backed stance called "the soul arch" and one of the leaders of the effort by surfers to give a more clean-cut appearance, agreed.

"We want people to think of us as professionals, not as professional beach bums," he said. "We just want respect for being good sportsmen, like good golfers and good tennis players." He said they would also like more money.

"Last year I was ranked the No. 1 surfer in the world and I made a little over $20,000," he said. "That's like pocket money for Johnny Miller," he added, referring to the golf pro.

Smirnoff and a handful of other corporations have helped underwrite the contests, and the American Broadcasting Company televises portions of the Duke Kahanamoku classic. But so far, television has not rushed to pump in the large amounts of cash that have made professional tennis and golfing more lucrative in recent years.

"I think the surfers have an exaggerated idea of their importance," said a representative of a corporation that posts prize money in the contests. "They think there's a great deal of popular interest in surfing, and so far it hasn't developed. And because surfers are such mavericks, it's been hard to get them organized. You get them together and you get four different ideas of how to merchandise surfing as a popular spectator sport."

"We want people to think of us as professionals, not as professional beach bums. We just want respect for being good sportsmen, like good golfers and good tennis players."

International

Syria ruled out participation in a Geneva conference on the Middle East under present circumstances. However, it left the door open to a negotiated settlement by saying it was not ready to join a "rejectionist" camp. The top spokesman in Damascus said that the visit to Israel by President Anwar el-Sadat of Egypt had created a serious obstacle to a Geneva meeting because it divided the Arabs and "made the Israeli leaders more adamant in their rejection of the Palestine Liberation Organization" and withdrawal from Arab lands. [Page 1, Column 6.]

Israel was condemned for occupation of Arab lands by the United Nations General Assembly despite a plea by Israel that it not interfere with a "new spirit of peace" following the visit to Jerusalem by President Anwal el-Sadat of Egypt. The vote was 102 to 4, with 29 abstentions. The United States, Canada, Israel and El Salvador voted against the resolution. [1:5.]

Thailand has hardened its attitude toward Vietnamese refugees. Until this fall the country was a major haven for those fleeing Indochina in small boats during the two and a half years since the Communist victory. Thailand has given reluctant shelter to nearly 100,000 refugeees, mainly from Laos, but the Thais have now begun sending the "boat people" back to sea. [1:2-3.]

A death sentence was imposed on a former Philippine senator who was the main political rival of President Ferdinand E. Marcos. Benigno S. Aquino Jr. was sentenced by a seven-member military court to die by a firing squad on charges of subversion, murder and illegal possession of firearms. Two co-defendants were also condemned to death. Mr. Aquino has been under arrest since 1972. [1:4.]

A critical battle in the Ogaden war was taking place in and around the ancient walled city of Harar, which Somali forces are seeking to take from Ethiopian control. Neither side has yet claimed victory. [3:4-6.]

National

A national strike by coal miners on Dec. 6 is "inevitable," Arnold R. Miller, president of the United Mine Workers of America, said as he walked out of contract negotiations. Yesterday was the effective deadline for averting a walkout by that date, but stockpiles of coal at electric and steel plants were termed unusually large this year. [1:3.]

An abundance of crops that are benefiting few, economically or politically, is causing problems for the Agriculture Secretary, Bob Bergland. Farm prices for grain and livestock have improved slightly in recent weeks, but many farmers complain that the Carter Administration did not press for higher price supports and subsidies in its new farm bill. What Mr. Bergland and the Administration do about farm problems may determine whether Democratic Congressmen from rural districts win next year's elections. [1:1-2.]

Farmers threatened a national strike over high production costs and low crop prices. In their protest, more than 4,000 tractors and 10,000 farmers and their families rolled into President Carter's hometown of Plains, Ga. [8:1.]

Metropolitan

New York City marshals are under fire because of complaints that they and process servers have been practicing law illegally. City officials and legal groups are investigating charges that the marshals and process servers have been preparing defective legal papers in eviction cases, victimizing some landlords and charging fees. [1:1-2.]

Students who default on loans from the Federal Government face withholding of transcripts and a bar to re-enrollment under a new policy announced by the State University of New York. The policy was ruled legal by State Attorney General Louis J. Lefkowitz. A growing number of students have declared bankruptcy or moved out of state to avoid repaying loans. [25:1-2.]

Arrests of looters in last July's blackout in New York City "at no point" led to a complete breakdown in the city's criminal-justice system, according to a committee appointed by Governor Carey. But the 18-member study panel concluded that nearly two-thirds of those arrested had to wait at least three days in "overcrowded" and "inhumane" conditions before their first court appearance and said that the city had no updated, comprehensive plan for such an emergency. [1:6.]

The transfer of 225 children who are emotionally disturbed or severely handicapped from distant states to institutions closer to home has been begun by New Jersey's government. The move was undertaken under prodding by legislators, who had described some of the out-of-state institutions as "expensive warehouses." [25:3-5.]

Business/Finance

The nation's basic money supply rose modestly in the latest banking week, Federal Reserve figures showed. The slower growth in money, to $333.9 billion for the week ended Nov. 16, continues a longer-run decline. The Fed's statistics also show that the money market's basic lending rate averaged 6.51 percent in the week, reflecting what analysts consider a more stable money market interest rate position by the Reserve. [27:6.]

Steel plants can be reopened with Federal funds available under existing programs, according to the chief of the Carter Administration's task force on aiding the steel industry. He urged officials from the Youngstown, Ohio, area to make a study in the hope of reopening the Campbell Works. The plant is being phased out, leading to the permanent layoff of 5,000 workers. [27:4.]

Stock prices gained modestly amid a semiholiday mood on Wall Street. Advances outpaced declines on the New York Stock Exchange by a ratio of 7-to-5. The Dow Jones industrial average advanced 1.12 points to 844.42, bringing the indicator's gain for the week to 8.5 points. [27:5.]

A United Press International dispatch in The Times on Nov. 24 incorrectly reported that Gerald Sprayregen, a New Rochelle, N.Y. businessman, had been convicted of misappropriating $2 million from John's Bargain Stores. Mr. Sprayregen was convicted on an 11-count indictment charging he had participated in filing false financial statements of the Stratton Group Ltd., of which John's was a division.

UPSTATE NEW YORK EXPECTING BLIZZARD

Metropolitan Region Is Warned About Rain That May Turn to Snow in Northern Areas

By ROBERT D. McFADDEN

A blizzard with four to eight inches of snow was forecast for today for western and northern New York State, and a prediction of heavy rain in the New York metropolitan area prompted a flash-flood watch for North Jersey and warnings of basement and street flooding in New York City.

The National Weather Service predicted about an inch of rain would fall in the city and one to two inches over North Jersey before the storm gave way to snow flurries and sharply dropping temperatures this afternoon.

The coldest weather of the season was expected in the metropolitan area tonight, with temperatures in the mid-to upper-20's, followed by a high tomorrow in the mid-30's, a spokesman for the Weather Service said.

Two storms—one moving northward along the Atlantic Coast and the other moving eastward from the Great Lakes—were expected to meet over upstate New York today, generating heavy snows and biting cold over a wide area.

Tides Abnormally High

As the storm moved over the metropolitan area, rain began falling in the city about 5 P.M. yesterday and was expected to intensify through the night and early morning hours today before tapering off to snow flurries in the early afternoon. A possibility of heavier flurries was cited for areas north of the city.

In addition to the overnight flash-flood watch covering areas near streams and small rivers in North Jersey, the Weather Service posted local flood warnings for low-lying highways and residential areas of the city. Basement flooding heavily damaged homes in several sections of Staten Island two weeks ago.

Heavy easterly winds and abnormally high tides overnight raised the threat of additional flooding in low-lying coastal areas.

The Weather Service predicted that temperatures would drop from around 40 this morning through the 30's this afternoon. Clearing skies and continued cold were forecast for tomorrow in the metropolitan area.

With little more than a few flurries in sight, the city's Sanitation Department was making no unusual preparations. However, the New York State Thruway Authority posted travelers' warnings for most of the upstate and western sections of the Gov. Thomas E. Dewey Thruway, bracing for the first big storm of a winter that officially begins at 6:24 P.M. on Dec. 21.

Times Article on Iran Protested

About 75 people staged a 30-minute demonstration outside the West 43d officers of The New York Times yesterday afternoon. The demonstrators, organized by the Iranian Students Association in the United States, said that a Reuters news service article in Thursday's issue of the Times reporting a clash between Teheran workers and dissidents was inaccurate. The demonstrators, most of whom wore masks to conceal their identities, contended that the workers were actually Iranian secret policemen.

Santa's Helpers Starting Work To Spread the Holiday Cheer

By MORRIS KAPLAN

When not otherwise engaged, Santa Claus may be a night watchman, an ice-cream vendor, a summer-resort worker, a carpenter, a house painter, an actor. Or he may be unemployed or on welfare, or have a drinking problem.

Whatever their otherwise employment—or lack of it—more than 40 Santas mustered in Times Square yesterday begin the 81st annual bell-ringing appeal on behalf of the poor, the elderly, the lonely.

As the Santa Clauses took to the street corners, shoppers took to the stores for the start of the holiday shopping season. Under cloudy skies, and mostly temperate weather, people got into the holiday spirit, hurrying from store to store, their arms filled with gift-wrapped packages, as Salvation Army trumpets blared.

The hustle-bustle of holiday shopping was not confined to the city. Police in Nassau County reported huge traffic jams in the afternoon in the vicinity of the Roosevelt Field, Sunrise Mall and Mid-Island Plaza shopping centers as thousands flocked to Thanksgiving-season sales. The police reported traffic at a virtual standstill on Meadowbrook Parkway, Old Country Road and Merrick Avenue near Roosevelt Field in Garden City. Entrances to the shopping center were closed off at times because no parking places were left.

From now until Christmas Eve, the "Santa's helpers"—a term used to explain to children why there are so many Santas around — will collect funds for the Volunteers of America to pay for Christmas dinners and other holiday comforts for the needy.

Wearing white-trimmed red-cotton suits over warmer clothing, some of them tugged at their white nylon beards and whiskers as they lined up for instructions and were told "don't overdo the ho-ho-ho bit" and "don't eat garlic."

Their twinkling eyes showed their pleasure in being posed for television cameramen and photographers. Maj. Curt Gleason, chaplain of the Bowery Tabernacle, which is run by the Volunteers, estimated that 15 percent of the sidewalk Santas were derelicts living at the Volunteers mission at 65 East Houston Street.

"If it was bitter cold and snowy, we'd have had another 20 showing up," another official said.

You Have to Like Children

In his 16th consecutive season as a Santa, Danny Walsh, who is 48 years old, explained that this was "not a job for a man who doesn't like children." Mr. Walsh, a bachelor and a seasonal worker at resorts, said he received about $7 a day for his eight-hour tour, plus lodging and meals at the mission.

He recalled posing with a bikini-clad model on Fifth Avenue near Rockefeller Center on a November day when the temperature soared to 70 degrees. "She mopped my brow," he said.

"You have to be patient with kids," he said. "Once a 6-year-old boy asked me for a real gun because, he said, the streets weren't safe."

Bill Davis, a 53-year-old actor from Mobile, Ala., "where they don't have snow," rehearsed a couple of ho-ho-ho's in a deep bass voice. This was his third role as a Santa, he said, and "I'd be in the wrong business if I didn't enjoy people."

He has been playing the role of "the old patrician" in an Off Off Broadway production of "Caligula" at the National Arts Theatre, 25 East Fourth Street. But he enjoys the Santa role.

"Children light up the scene," he said. "It's the next thing to bring a star on Broadway."

area, or with United States and other diplomats who had come to the airport to meet them and then had ordered them to board a flight for Buenos Aires.

Mrs. González, who is 52 years old, said that although the Chilean police had told her that her baggage and that of Mrs. Bravo, 27, and Mrs. Ortiz, 42, had been placed aboard the plane, it had not and the three women landed in Buenos Aires with only their handbags.

A spokesman for the Chilean Mission to the United Nations said tonight that his Government's refusal to allow the women back into Chile had nothing to do with the fact that they had publicized abroad their quest for missing relatives. Rather, the spokesman said, the refusal had to do with the women's "clear political orientation in trying to degrade the Government." He added that their "activities were very intensely used by Radio Moscow in a direct broadcast sent to Chile" to try and create instability there.

Asked if the women would be permanently kept out of the country, the official responded: "No. It is only for the time being. I believe this is going to end O.K."

The three women, speaking in Spanish, said that when they landed in Buenos Aires, they had experienced more problems. An unidentified woman, they said, demanded fare from them for the flight from Chile to Argentina, and when they refused she had called the airport police.

They said they had been kept in detention facilities for six hours without food or drink and that airport officials had refused their requests to contact someone outside the airport.

They said that the police had told them that if they did not agree to be fingerprinted, they would be taken to jail. They had refused and had been put into a car, they said, but after a short ride the car had stopped and they had been turned over to a United Nations official.

That same day the United States Embassy in Buenos Aires offered them asylum and arranged for their flight to New York, where American officials today again offered them asylum.

But, Mrs. Ortiz said, they do not want to stay in the United States. Mrs. Bravo added, "We want to keep insisting on going back. It's our country."

FLORENCE KIMBALL, TEACHER, DIES AT 87

Former Singer Gave Classes at the Juilliard School for 46 Years —Leontyne Price a Student

By ALLEN HUGHES

Florence Page Kimball, the teacher of Leontyne Price and many other singers of achievement during a teaching career of 46 years at the Juilliard School, died Thursday at St. Vincent's Hospital. She was 87 years old and had been living in a nursing home before entering the hospital last week.

Miss Price began her studies with Miss Kimball when she enrolled at Juilliard in 1949. In a Juilliard commencement address in 1973, the soprano paid tribute to her teacher—"the beloved and gracious lady," Miss Price said, "who is responsible in every way for my being here today and for any resemblance to a professional performer that I may represent."

Miss Kimball's students numbered in the hundreds, and many of them sang at the Metropolitan Opera, the New York City Opera and with other companies in this country as well as in Europe. Among them were Annamary Dickey, Jean Madeira, Sung Sook Lee, Joyce Mathis, Mariquita Moll, Regina Sarfaty, Nigi Sato, Wilma Shakesneider, Veronica Tyler and Martha Flowers.

Miss Kimball began her career as a singer and was for a time, a student of Marcella Sembrich, whom she succeeded as a teacher of singing at Juilliard in 1927. Miss Kimball had by then made her New York debut at Aeolian Hall, and during her years as a performer she also gave recitals at Town Hall and made recital tours.

A native of Salt Lake City, Miss Kimball attended boarding school and then went to Europe, where she studied singing. Among her teachers were Sarah Robinson-Duff and Frank King Clark. For piano, she was a student of Mary Alport, Carlo Buonamici and Arthur Shepherd.

In 1917, the French Government gave her the Award of Merit for her volunteer musical service during World War I.

Miss Kimball is survived by a sister, Alice Wadleigh of San Francisco, and a nephew, Frank Wadleigh, of Tucson, Ariz. She had been married to Schuyler Smith, a business executive, who died many years ago.

At her request, there will be no service.

THOMAS J. CONNELL

Thomas J. Connell, who retired in 1972 after spending 50 years as a theater lighting expert, died Wednesday at his home in Norwich, Conn. He was 77 years old.

Mr. Connell did the original lighting for "Our Town" in 1938 and worked for 30 years with Jed Harris, the producer.

He is survived by two daughters, Mary-Jane Fusco and Jo Ellen Leone; eight grandchildren, and a great grandchild.

Charles Freeman Rites Today

HOWARD, Mass., Nov. 25 (AP)—Funeral ervices will be held here tomorrow for Charles A. S. Freeman, a former managing editor of four Gannett newspapers in New York State, the former Olean Herald, The Rochester Times-Union, The Rochester Democrat and Chronicle and The Newburgh News. Mr. Freeman died at the age of 87 Wednesday in a Hyannis, Mass., hospital.

DR. MANOUCHEHR EGHBAL IRANIAN EX-PRIME MINISTER

TEHERAN, Iran, Nov. 25 (AP)—Dr. Manouchehr Eghbal, Iran's Prime Minister from 1957 to 1960 and chairman of the National Iranian Oil Company for the last 14 years, died today of heart failure, officials announced. He was 68 years old.

Dr. Eghbal, a professor of infectious diseases, was governor of the former province of Azarbaijan, and held the posts of minister of health, education, interior, and roads and communications. After serving as chancellor of Tabriz University from 1950 to 1953, he was elected senator, became a royal court minister and later chancellor of Teheran University.

Dr. Eghbal is survived by his wife and two daughters.

LEIGH M. BATTSON

Special to The New York Times

LOS ANGELES, Nov. 25—Leigh M. Battson, a past president of the Santa Anita Race Track and a former petroleum executive, died yesterday in Palm Desert, Calif., after a series of illnesses. He was 86 years old.

Mr. Battson began his long business career in the investment securities field in 1913. In 1938, he became an independent oil and gas operator and subsequently served as president of Los Nietos Company. In 1949, when the concern was acquired by Union Oil Company of California, he became a director of Union Oil.

He is survived by his wife, Lucy Smith Battson of Beverly Hills, and a sister, Jessie Lanham of Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Memorial services will be private.

Morgan T. Murray, a Partner In New York Brokerage Firm

Morgan T. Murray, a partner in the New York City brokerage firm of Chauncey & Company, died Thursday at his home on Breezy Way in Lawrence, L.I. He was 45 years old.

Mr. Murray was a former partner and vice president of Baker Weeks & Company in New York City.

He was a director of the Lawrence Country Day School in Hewlett, L.I., the Lawrence Beach Club and the Cedarhurst Yacht Club, a former governor of the Rockaway Country Club in Cedarhurst, L.I. a member of the Lawrence Association and a director of the Five Towns Community House.

He is survived by his wife, the former Judith Morgan; three sons, Peter, Thomas and Bruce; a daughter, Diane; two s[illegible]s, and two brothers.

ERNEST H. HAND

Ernest H. Hand, who retired in 1975 as vice president of the United Parcel Service and as its air-service manager in New York City, died Thursday in his home at 345 East 86th Street after a long illness. He was 67 years old.

Mr. Hand was a ruling elder of the Central Presbyterian Church at his death and was a former clerk of its board of sessions. Mr. Hand, who had attended New York University, is survived by a brother, Edward S. Hand of Scarsdale.

High Death Toll Feared in Uranium Mining

NASHVILLE, Nov. 25 (UPI)—Hundreds of millions of people could die as the result of the mining and milling of uranium to fuel nuclear-powered generators of electricity, Representative Clifford Allen, Democrat of Tennessee, said today.

He said that a report on file with the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in Washington stated that emissions of cancer-causing radiation from the mining and milling of uranium were 100,000 times greater than previously estimated.

Mr. Allen, a frequent critic of utilities, applied his own mathematics to come up with his death toll figure from a report prepared by Dr. Walter H. Jordan, former assistant director of the Oak Ridge National Laboratory.

Dr. Jordan, who now serves as a part-time member of the Atomic Safety and Licensing Board, filed the report with the regulatory commission Sept. 21. He said in a telephone interview that his report had been based in part on a study conducted two years ago by a Cornell University physicist, Robert Pohl.

Dr. Jordan said that Mr. Allen's figures on the death toll from the release of additional radiation were correct if Mr. Pohl was correct on the biological effects of the release of additional radiation into the atmosphere.

"I know there are a lot of biologists who will disagree with Mr. Pohl," Dr. Jordan said.

1. The declaration was a letter written on Nov. 2, 1917, by Arthur James Balfour, then the British Foreign Secretary, to the British Zionist Party. It endorsed the establishment in Palestine of a "national home for the Jewish people," but it also declared that "nothing shall be done that may prejudice the rights of existing non-Jewish communities in Palestine." Arabs note that the declaration failed to endorse the idea of making Palestine an exclusively Jewish community. Mr. Begin, like other Israelis, contends the delaration established a historical link between the Jewish nation and Palestine.
2. Cyclones in India are similar to the hurricanes of the western Atlantic and the typhoons of the western Pacific, typically born in the intertropical convergence zone where trade winds of the Northern and Southern hemispheres meet to form an updraft.
3. The Panhellenic Socialist Movement, led by Andreas Papandreou.
4. It voted to issue a proposed rule that would ban cigarette smoking, which would require hearings that could extend over several months. Such hearings have already been conducted on cigar and pipe smoking.
5. Plans for a $25 million Eastern Airlines shuttle terminal to replace a 16-year-old "temporary" facility at La Guardia Airport were announced by the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey. At the new two-story terminal, which is scheduled for completion in 1980, passengers arriving in cars, buses or taxis will be discharged in a sheltered area, mount an escalator to the second level and then board planes from covered bridges.
